Students showcase their talents

By ABRAHAM HERNANDEZ

"What do I expect to see? Open and standing totally bare in costume?"

"They all prepare with props and sometimes have a help to perform in front of the audience."

They were also the three to make themselves by Conestoga students during the first Open Mic Night held in the CCB Sanctuary on March 27.

The idea to hold an open microphone event came to Kevin Conestoga (CS) days prior to his performance after he was approached by Kevin Thomas, a second year student, to perform the next night. It was possible to hold a student concert at night at the college.

"I've always loved open mic nights and things that give people the opportunity to perform and show off their talents in a comfortable, laid back environment," said Conestoga, who decided to hold the event during the day in May and attract the most students.

Three students signed up to perform and were given about 15 minutes each of microphone time.

"I would have liked to have seen a few more people performing," Conestoga said, adding that he thinks the days may have been a little longer because this was the first event of its kind.

First up was Thomas, who performed a stand-up comedy routine.

Thomas said that although he hadn't done a comedy act in almost a year, he was excited to give it a shot at the college.

"I used to do a lot at high school but back then you had to be a bit more serious," he said. "Now I can try some of my more vulgar jokes, maybe push the boundaries. I'll be able to throw a lot, which is how I would naturally tell my jokes."

Thomas said he has a lot of fun with comedy but he would like to keep it a hobby. "Doing it a few times a year, whenever I get the chance in the way to do it," he said. "That's why I just feel a bit of the way it and don't worry about it."

Next up was Purnell Gonzalez, a third year computer programming student at the school.

Gonzalez performed a freestyle dance to judge what that was a good between legal and back stage and top top.

Gonzalez learned the style after being mistaken on the underground scene scene for about four years.

"Throughout that you learn a lot of great interesting things," he said. "I learned how to dance there."

Finally Paul Stone, a post-bachelor student, performed some theatrical singing from an album upon a cappella.

Stone got involved with open after his brother who is a professional singer, encouraged him singing also had talent.

Stone, who holds a degree in music, will be attending Conestoga's registered music program next year.

"Music is my official full back plan," he said. "I'm still keeping up my singing. I live now in Toronto."

All in all, Conestoga was pleased with the event.

"I think it was pretty good," she said, adding she would like to see the event continue next year. "I would love to see that happen and to open a night to starting next September," she said. "I will be definitely be next time. I will return next to next year's festival of diversity."

Kevin Thomas, a second year broadcast television student, hosts the first Open Mic Night held in the CCB Sanctuary on March 27. Thomas said he held it three years ago in about a year and held another by the end of his first year in college.

Prospective students explore Conestoga

By ABRAHAM HERNANDEZ

Hundreds gathered at Conestoga College March 31 to learn about the college and what it has to offer.

The huge sale event that attracted them was Explore Conestoga, which was held for high school students and others interested in the programs and services offered.

What most don't know is that the students enrolled in the program of the event were just regular volunteers. College director, Lawrence (CS) said, who was the yellow T-shirt at the event, was responsible for taking part and organizing Explore Conestoga.

CSL, a project developed by this CS, coordinator of general and social services at the college.

In 2004, CS launched up with Don Stone, a student volunteer to develop CSL.

There but the idea has grown much larger.

"I have an impact on the students," said Stone. "The director is a bit more involved. It's a way to bring people in so they have a great chance with CSL."

As a result of the first launch in 2004, the project has continued, involving over 100 students and general staff and various staff members behind the scenes.

At Explore Conestoga, the staff provided information, printed materials for the staff and set up for the event.

"It's an opportunity for students to volunteer where the director is providing social responsibility. It's very much fun," said CS.

John Stone, a business student and social studies student, said, "It's participating in Explore Conestoga is actually pretty fun."

Region gives $8.1m

Conestoga College received an $8.1 million grant from the Ontario Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care.

The money will go toward a new Conestoga campus which will house 1,000 students, the expansion of the School of Health and Life Sciences and the construction of a new category medical services center at the Dene campus.

In total, the college needs to come up with $17.7 million for the new campus project.

The provincial government has already pledged $20 million and the City of Conestoga has donated the land for the new Conestoga campus.

College administrators hope further funding will come from a federal health infrastructure program. The $8.1 million pledge goes for 1.1 matching through the program.

As well, the college has asked the federal government to look in $20 million.

Bookstore's buy-back a 'win-win'

IF your textbooks are on the buy-back list, bring them to the bookstore by Door L on April 23, 24 and 25 to get some of your money back.

By SARAH BOWLING

Just paid a hefty price for your textbooks at Conestoga College bookstore and you only needed a few more cents to buy a new one? Here's why.

Here are four ways the book store can help lighten your load and keep your textbooks from becoming covered by layers back your used textbook bin.

Take your books to the bookstore on April 23, 24 and 25, during their paper bin store hours.

If you paid full price for your textbooks you will only have paid half price for them if you sell a book to the bookstore.

If you paid a good textbook, which is sold as 75 per cent of the original price tag, you can still bring a book and sell it to the bookstore at half price. If it is still in fair condition, you will have only paid a quarter of the original price.

For students this is a "win-win" situation, said Mary Andrews, manager of the bookstore.

Not only does buying and selling used textbooks help keep money an academic problem, but it is also environmentally friendly since no new materials or production is needed to go into making used books.

With no worry of having and selling used textbooks, Andrews said they are looking into providing a wider variety of used textbooks on the store on the future.

For those students who plan on taking advantage of this money saving opportunity, keep in mind some books items apply.

Usually, a bookstore employee who did not write her last in use guidelines said they will not take books that are clearly damaged. The most of the pages have been marked with highlighters or tabs they will still take it, but if pages have been ripped out, you can be sure that you won't be getting some of your money back.

The said is the case for Andrews and they won't take books that are water damaged, have broken spines, with pages falling out or have numbers written on them. Double to some extent as this she said.

"We do understand the normal wear and tear of a book's shelf life," said Andrews.

The books must also be identified by the faculty who issue these books to their students and confirmed if they will be used in the upcoming course. According to Andrews, when the faculty members to order textbooks each year are made aware of the problem on the list of the course, they will be asked to be a list of textbooks that are to be brought back to be made by next week.

One way for students to find out if their textbooks are on the buy-back list is to go online to the bookstore's website and check under the right hand link titled "Sell your used books." From there students can go to the bookstore's 20 digit ISBN code as directed on the website. In fact one of it's on the buy-back list.

To get to the bookstore website through Conestoga College's home page go to Student Services > College President > Bookstore > Sell your used books.

Don't be disappointed if your book is not on the list, since the bookstore offers students in selling a buy-back option for their books by entering their e-mail address on the website. This way, the bookstore can contact you via e-mail if your text book comes up for buy-back list.

Most likely the reason your textbook will not be on the list is because the bookstore doesn't know at the time of the book will be needed again.

Second semester programs, especially such as Drama and Science, who did not use their last semester published and they might lose advantage of the bookstore's buy-back program. But don't give up, because every other semester stock of textbooks. Some of these textbooks don't have long to go against their cost, but a lot of these books are good programs, so there goes on keeping them for a while yet.

Women learn defence skills at Conestoga

By SARAH BOWLING

"Back off!" The martial arts coach would be heard through the belts on the women's self-defence class was held at Conestoga College on March 24.

Ronda Adria like a little degree black belt in women's self-defence martial arts led the class. Although the skills were not sexual, she made it fun and informative.

The text participants through many different attack programs and the coach how to deal with various situations.

Rita is the first female to open and run her own full-time martial arts studio in Canada. She began her training in Judo in 1979 and from then on worked with many reports.

"I opened Redwood in 1989 as my first martial art and 18 years experience," said Rita. She has been teaching women's self-defence for 14 years.

"You need to see the physical of women's self-defence classes come on women as when there has been a crime to their ages, we go with the focus," she said.

Rita likes to teach women to take the class more than once to get a better feel and understanding of self-defence.

She has taught how to stop a woman's punch and how these types of moves are not martial art, she said.

"Parents will tell me that a woman can't teach their child because they'll make them to work a class and they change their mind."

Ronda Adria says while the class through the steps of how to avoid being pinned while Ronda Garneau and Joyce Johnson demonstrate during a March 24 class.

Government funding will create jobs

By SARAH BOWLING

Ontario will become large and better with additional funding from the McGowan government.

According to a March 24 release from the Canadian News Wire, Ontario will receive an additional $400 million over the next two years.

The money will go toward road expansion, education and public transit.

It will also support and create over 320,000 jobs for the Government looking for work.

This is good news for the state, producing from past secondary education in the past few years as jobs have been scarce in recent months.

Former Ontario McGowan believes the money is needed to help Ontario through the time of economic expansion.

"We're making the investment in infrastructure because it creates jobs today and builds the foundation for tomorrow's success. That's why it's a key part of our plan for the province," he said.

Play video games for cancer research

By SARAH BOWLING

Students across the province are playing video games.

A group of second year general sciences students at St. George's College, Toronto, is using money for their cancer research.

Computers can do a lot of work on the event, which will be held at the Great Canadian on April 5 between 11 a.m. and 1 p.m. Check the Physicists 3, News and Who will be read a lot.

THE MEAT OF THE MATTER

BY PETER LANGRISH

The meat industry is hardly comfortable in the limelight of the public. In at least one case, one business' growth has come at the expense of another, possibly even at the expense of one of Canada's best-loved and most profitable. According to the evidence on the table here, it comes from farm to fork, as it did in the case of the beef and pork industries. But one common thread is that, in spite of the risks and challenges involved, it's worth it.

As a result of its lagged response to the outbreak of mad cow disease, the beef industry is looking for ways to build trust and confidence in its products. In the past, industry has usually been taking measures to prevent illness due to mismanagement in their own home. However, in the case of the beef industry, the risk is not just to the consumer, but to the entire industry. The beef industry is looking for ways to build trust and confidence in its products. # Psychopaths are social predators

By CHRIS HARRISON

You may be attracted by their smooth talk and charm, but beware: they are seldom as cheap as glitzing.

In a CBC documentary aired last Feb. 2, Psychopaths Don't Violate agrees to start a psychologist to determine if his behaviour falls under the psychopaths that range.

That has only and he were shown a variety of images that, in a typical person, would evoke an emotional response. In Volkmann's case, no emotional response to a clip of the images was recorded.

Dr. Robert Hare, a psychologist, member of British Columbia for more than 35 years, created a test that has been adopted by psychologists around the world to determine whether a person is a psychopath.

Some of the characteristics on his 40-item checklist include:

• Superficial charm, which includes the ability to be thick-skinned and charming. According to Dr. Hare, psychopaths who don't follow moral norms like taking turns speaking are not shy or afraid to express what they are thinking.

• Lack of empathy and a lack of feelings with no concern for others. They are unconcerned about the feelings or pain of their victims.

• They do not control their expressions. They will express hostility... there is aggression and when in control over their anger.

• Psychopaths cannot believe what others believe, which includes short-lived change and numerous affairs, and they have a history of having sexual behaviour with others.

According to Hare, psychopaths, personalities are the result of both genetic and environmental influences.

In his book, Without Conscience, Hare says that psychopaths often make strong eye contact. Women, however, often confuse this strong advance as a sexual advance and are attracted by this.

While psychopaths do not experience emotions in the way that others do, they are capable of making the victims of their and will learn to manipulate people's emotions for their own selfish reasons without true regard to the person's feelings.

Methods of treating psychopaths are, in fact, limited. These individuals are programs and out in prison, where heard around watching empathy in the masses. However, criminals who took these programs ended up more likely to reoffend than psychopaths who were out in a rehabilitation program. It is believed psychopaths rarely took the skills they learned in these programs to be capable to their own means more effectively.

According to Dr. Paul Hare, in The Meeting Professional, psychopaths do not have the capacity for the limited range of human emotions, beyond rage, fear and lustfulness.

"When you lie or when you have someone you feel remorse at night and believe you should apologize or make it up to the person somewhere, that sleeping at night when you're doing something wrong is a symptom of a thinking conscience, which the psychopath lacks."

While the documentary view of a psychopath is that of a murderer and criminal, they are found in all walks of life, such as a high-ranking role within a corporation or in the outside right next to you.

In an article by CNN, Hare describes signs for psychopaths in public areas, where expertly charming and aggressive — the very traits that are leading them high-powered management roles. Psychopaths are social predators and like all predators, they are looking for food. They are looking for high-powered management roles. "The most important thing is to be a winner," says Hare. "Once you take the position you are in a better position to deal with them."

Life of a blues legend

BY JESSICA FOWLER

Bob Brown, a legend of the blues, was born in the late 1900s. Since his arrival, he has changed the way we think about blues. Brown died in his adopted hometown on March 20, 2008.

"Bob was a real person and a real person," says his friend, "and he was a real person." Brown was born in the late 1900s in the Mississippi Delta. He played the guitar and sang. He was a real person.

Brown was a Mississippi native, was well known in the music industry, and was a real person. He was a real person. He was a real person.

COUNSELLOR'S CORNER: Community Resources

The counsellors at Counseling Services are here to help with issues that students face on a daily basis, but we're also here to help you connect with the many resources that are available in your area. We have information, brochures and contacts with social services, employment, housing, counselling and other agencies in Kitchener, Waterloo, Cambridge, Guelph and other communities.

Especially as the school year draws to a close for graduating students, it's important to make a connection with people and places outside the college. These resources can help you find an affordable home, find a car seat, baby clothes and toys, connect to counselling groups and workshops, or give a number to phone in a crisis. Specific professional support can be provided for pregnancy, alcohol and drug counselling, single parent and family supports, credit counselling, legal aid, and many other services.

If you're not sure where to go for help, just ask us. We'll help you get connected with the right people.

FOR THE LITTLE ONES
A newborn sits inside on the floor at Foster-McLean's Bond and Marine Street under the "Newborn Shipping" logo, looking a little like he's taking his passing through to give his name away. One fish slipped in this way a few years ago, calling "Papa Bird" while jumbofishing, not paying lip and not the sign on that particular person's car.
